

Health and Beauty Go Hand in Hand

in Gossard Corsets. The famous French painter who designed them was thinking most of artistic perfection—but she achieved hygienic perfection, as well. Because she followed Nature's lines—and in Nature, beauty and health go hand in hand.

THE Gossard
CORSETS
"They Face Us Front"

represent an entirely new idea in corset construction. They are the original front-facing corsets, but that is only one of their features. Their habit of closing, back-into them ideal in producing the "new back" effect. They are snugly hip-fitting—produce that long, slender, graceful slope so much admired. They are beautiful, too—are prescribed by physicians as tending to give support where most needed, to improve the breathing, and induce an erect and proper bearing. But you can learn the advantages of the Gossard for yourself better than we can tell them to you. They're on show now, and in infinite variety. Sold in no other store.

That Globe is to have a business college is an assured fact. A school for the teaching of all branches of commercial business has been opened in Suite 27, Trust building, with B. Such an enterprise may mean much for Globe and the promoters should meet with a good measure of success.

BROAD STREET.

Emmett Gaynor, brother of Mrs. Emma Hessler, Testifies That He Spent Afternoon Drinking With Man Who Was Killed by His Sister.

That Weaver had caught Mrs. Emma Hessler by the throat at one time, and again by the head, and that he was advancing upon her a third time after having fallen through a door and breaking the latch, was the statement made by Engineer Robert T. Bradford before the coroner's jury yesterday afternoon. After hearing the testimony of Bradford, Town Marshal Anderson, E. O. Kelly and Emmett Gaynor, the brother of the woman who killed the stage driver, Coroner Tinson Thomas continued the inquest until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Despite the fact that a spirited election was being conducted at the Piquet theater, but a few steps from the courthouse, the courtroom was filled with eager spectators when the jurors began to file into their seats. One of the jury was absent and S. M. Smith was sworn in his stead, this, however, necessitating the coroner's taking the entire jury again to the Jones undertaking parlors to view the body of J. W. Weaver.

Town Marshal Anderson was the first witness called to the stand. His testimony was much the same as the account of the shooting given by the Silver Belt yesterday morning. He said that he had left his office with E. O. Kelly just before the shooting, walked down to the corner of Broad and Cedar streets and started west across the street when he heard a shot, which he could not locate at first. Some one ran up and told him that a man had been killed, and he made the arrests, as already published.

Emmett Gaynor, the young brother of Mrs. Hessler, was next called. He said that he had been drinking that day with Weaver and other men, and that Weaver accompanied him to the house. They went into the kitchen and witness said he sat down in a chair and went to sleep. He did not know what transpired after that until he was aroused by the commotion which followed the shooting by his sister and went into the hall of the main building, where he saw Weaver lying on the floor.

Replying to questions by Attorney Weinberger, representing the territory, and Attorney Wiley E. Jones for the defense, Gaynor said that he had gone to the house twice that day and had been with Weaver much of the time, the stage driver having tapped him on the shoulder and asked for a conversation, which led them into a saloon where they sat down and drank beer and talked for a while, in company with Harry Smith and a man named Vernon. On the second visit to the Scott house, Gaynor said that he saw his mother and sister talking to Weaver, but he paid no attention, as he had been drinking and wanted to sleep. Witness said he had never seen the pistol with which Weaver was killed.

Robert T. Bradford, the next witness, testified that just before the shooting he was standing on the west side of Broad street with George Mitchell and George Campbell, where all of them could see straight into the hall of the Scott rooming house. He testified that he saw a man catch a woman by the throat and pull her to the front room. She broke away from him, and he caught her again, this time by the head. Witness said that the woman once more broke away and ran out of the front door towards the courthouse, and that he was under the impression that she was running to the marshal's office, but she was again seen in the hall, having apparently returned by the rear door. There was more tussling, the man falling twice, once against the door of the front room, breaking the latch with his weight. Witness said that the woman had called twice for help and that he and his friends went to her assistance, the woman running into the door of one of the rear rooms and locking herself in, but that when they pulled the man out of the front room, she again came into the hall. Weaver advanced upon her and she shot him. Bradford said that he had his back turned when the shot was fired and did not see the weapon, but he did see Weaver walk backward about six or eight feet and fall backward, with his head to the street.

"You had your back turned when the shot was fired?" asked Juror Smith.

"Yes, my back was turned and I did not see when the shot was fired."

"Had the woman called for help?"

"Yes, she called for help twice."

Marshal Anderson was recalled to the stand and replying to questions by the court said that after leaving his office he had just had time to walk leisurely down to Broad and Cedar streets, walking directly past the Scott house, and that in passing he saw no sign of any disorder and heard nothing until the shot sounded out.

E. O. Kelly, who was with the marshal at the time, testified that he, too, had failed to notice any fighting going on in the Scott house when they passed in front of it.

The expectation is that when the hearing is resumed today, Mrs. Hessler will be placed on the stand.
